T3 SELECTS: THE LAW OF DRONES

PLANNING ON TAKING TO THE SKIES? BE SURE TO FOLLOW THE DRONECODE

The Dronecode?
→ Catchy name, eh? The Civil Aviation Authority's Dronecode isn't to be confused with a project of the same name that's working towards creating open-source drone software in a short set of rules for hobbyist pilots that'll ensure you don't get collared when taking your quadcopter for a spin.

Go on, then.
→ The basics are things you've probably already doing: make sure you can always see your drone, keep it away from aircraft/airfields and fly under 400 feet. If your unit has a camera, you can't fly it within 50 metres of people, vehicles or buildings, and you can't fly over congested areas or gatherings. The last couple are worth following even if you don't have a camera.

Congested areas?
→ Basically, don't take your drone up anywhere that's densely populated – and the CAA counts any area that's "substantially used for recreation" among these. So a park may not be adequate open space, unless you have permission to do so. Gaining such permission is non-trivial, even if it's for a single flight; you'll likely have to complete a risk assessment, and regular flying will require the completion of an operating manual. Using a drone for aerial work, as in for commercial purposes, is even more restricted – you'll absolutely need permission from the CAA, and will likely need to complete an assessment from a CAA-approved training organisation.

How can I learn more?
→ Check out www.caa.co.uk, and react to the Air Navigation Order while you're there: it's dense stuff but important to know, particularly as authorities are clamping down.
